Companies Ask Workers with Disabilities to Check the Box - And

That's a Good Thing

TBTL's Joe Entwisle weighs in on the new OFCCP self-disclosure form

Let's not get all worked up about the new self-identification form for workers with disabilities. This form is designed to help federal contractors and subcontractors meet the new Section 503 regulations, which set a target of a seven percent workforce comprised of employees with disabilities. Issued by the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs, the form -- which is voluntary -- appears to be a huge benefit and not a negative for businesses. The Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) prohibits businesses from asking specific questions about whether an applicant has a disability. Read more...

New Business Featured on TBTL Jobs Portal

Quest Diagnostics now recruiting workers with disabilities through Think Beyond the Label

Think Beyond the Label is now helping Quest Diagnostics find and recruit qualified candidates with disabilities and build awareness for their disability hiring efforts. As a disability recruiting partner, Think Beyond the Label will feature Quest Diagnostics as a Featured Employer on its digital hub, promoting their career opportunities on the Think Beyond the Label job board and publicizing their dedication to building inclusive, high-performing teams. Check out the new jobs available now on the Think Beyond the Label Jobs Portal or go straight to the Quest Diagnostics career pages to start your job search.
